Peculiar Accident.

A peculiar accident happened to Chas. Fontana, at the Congregational church picnic, held at Nathanson's Grove on Tuesday last. In the "tug of war," which consists of an exhibition of strength on the part of a number of men, who contend against each other for the mastery by grasping and pulling on the opposite ends of a long rope, young Fontana's neck through some unaccountable means became entangled in one end of the same and he was thrown down, dragged and choked until almost black in the face. Fortunately his predicament was discovered in time to prevent anything more than a severe choking and a great big scare.

A Wise Reform. The habit of administering quinine in powerful doses, as an antidote to malarial fevers, was once dangerously common. Happily this practice has disappeared with reform. Not only the public, but professional men have adopted, not wholly, of course, but largely, Hygieine's Stomach Bitters as a safe, tonic substitute for the pernicious alkali. The consequences of this abuse are in the most important. Some fever and acute sufferings are cured—formerly their cures were only for the time relieved, or half cured. The remedy eventually failing to produce any appreciable effect except the doses were increased. A course of the Bitters, administered followed, broke up the worst attacks and prevents their return. The evidence in favor of this sterling specific and household medicine is of so unambiguous character, but positive and satisfactory, and the source whence it proceeds are very numerous.

OLIVE CULTURE.

A Visit to the Flamant Vineyard and Olive Plantation. [Napa Reporter.]

We occasionally receive letters from subscribers, or correspondents, asking information in regard to the possibilities of olive culture in our section of the State. We are in the habit of referring all such parties to Mr. Adolphe Flamant, whose large vineyard and olive plantation on the county road, between Napa and Sonoma, are well known. Mr. Flamant's experience in those matters is unquestioned; and, desirous to witness the success that has attended his olive plantation of over six thousand trees we concluded to visit it in order to present to our readers the result of our inspection.

The Flamant vineyard and olive plantation are situated about half-way between Napa and Sonoma on the county road. The vineyard lies on a gradual slope from the road and extends to hill lands of quite a high altitude on which is the olive plantation. The whole property bears the evident mark of experience and work. Our surprise was great when, reaching the olive plantation, we found trees, two and three years old, thriving luxuriantly on arid and rocky lands on which no one, except experienced parties, would ever expect to see a fruit tree grow. But the olive tree seems to prefer such location, for those planted on the top and slope of hills, amidst beds of rocks where but little soil is to be seen, are thriving with more vigor than those on adjoining richer ground which is not so well drained during winter and early spring.

Mr. Flamant confirmed to us what has been so repeatedly said in reference to olive culture, namely: 1st. That such trees can be planted more successfully on rocky lands whose value is but one-fourth or one-fifth of those suitable to wine culture.

2nd. That the cost of plantation and ultimate yearly cultivation do not reach one-third of the cost of a vineyard.

3d. That the crops can be gathered with much more economy and celerity than grapes can, and that the olive oil or pickled olive, which can be made with out-fittings costing about one-tenth part of those required for wine making, can be disposed of within a week from the gathering of the berries.

4th. That the insect pests that are able to attack the olive tree can be fought, with ordinary care, with much more ease and economy than phylloxera, or other enemies of the vine.

5th. That an olive tree planted in permanent site from the one year old rooted cutting will develop with more vigor and rapidly than if kept several years in nursery to be transplanted when six or seven years old, as is sometimes done in Europe by parties who wish to retain meantime the use of their rocky lands for pasturage, and that, when so planted, it brings berries when four years old, and, beginning with its fifth year, gives paying crops which increase in quantity from year to year until the tree reaches its full development, when it will pay several times more than the best vineyard.

6th. That the profit on the crop can be computed at about 50 cents net per gallon of berries, and that while the tree is apt to give 6, 8, 10 gallons of fruit when 6, 8, 10 years old, its capacity of bearing will reach 20, 30 and 40 gallons per tree when in from 15 to 20 years it will have reached its full maturity.

7th. That the tree seems to be harder to die than old Matusala, and that it can be considered as a permanent investment since there are olive trees still living at Jerusalem, which were known during Evangelical times.

8th. That the tree will stand the longest spells of dry weather and not be affected unless by such extremes of hot or cold weather as are absolutely unknown in California.

9th. That the Picholine variety, which Mr. Flamant has adopted for his plantation, while it makes very good oil, stands as the best for pickling. Moreover it grows quickly, and is less subject to damages by insects than other varieties are.

Mr. Flamant entered into a great many details while developing all of the points which satisfied us as to the correctness and practicability of his views on the subject. The growth of his trees, some of them absolutely on beds of rock with hardly any soil around, are now a standing evidence that this plantation, that was so much discussed at its start by parties who have never seen an olive plantation, has passed now from the phases of doubts into a progressive march to permanent success. By it, Mr. Flamant, through his indomitable energy and enterprise has taught us how to make use of rocky lands entirely unfit for any other culture.

If his example is followed, as it should be, we may look forward to the time in the near future when the rocky patches of land of our beautiful valley will be adorned by the light of those graceful evergreen trees, which will add to the beauty and prosperity of our section of the State.
